BLOOD SPORES
there is a fungus behind your right eye, pushing ever outwards. soon, it will take over the world

use PBTA! because it's cool but also because the "move" system seems helpful

you can steal/manipulate people's moves (hive mind)

listen to massive attack while playing

you are an operative for the HPC (human preservation coalition)
- probably something seedy going on there every player sets a repeating 5 minute timer after their intro. every time it goes off, they roll 2d6. if you roll a 2, the fungus takes over your character's brain instantly and they die

    the Fungal has to roll twice on the timer

OPERATIVE ARCHETYPES
- the soldier / THE BULLET
- the doctor / THE NEEDLE
- the mycologist / THE MYCOLOGIST
- the fungal (already 99% infected) / THE FUNGAL
- the citizen (knows the city well) / THE COMPASS (moral and otherwise)

but also, come up with better names for these! The Soldier is less evocative than The Warmonger or The Bullet missions for the HPC to complete involve retrieving research, collecting samples, thinning the myceloid horde, etc at the end of the day it's a hopeless task so the "missions" can be a little more aimless

I don't want this to feel like The Last of Us
- more "red." which is not really explanatory but it makes sense to me
- god I wish I could draw (well)
- ALTERNATIVELY just give people less information so they can come up with their own fungal takeover. if it ends up looking like the last of us that's their prerogative

the fungal infection (which needs a snappy name) peels back your skin and replaces it from the inside out, leaving you a dripping corpse covered in and puppeted by fungus is this too grody? but also IDC it's a cool aesthetic

grime and muck and schmutz and other synonyms EVERYWHERE

maybe just make the playbooks for now

STATS

- Move
- Fight
- Think
- Spore - fungal connection, definitely most interesting stat

is this boring

I don't think it quite hits the fungalpunk/mycopunk/biopunk vibe because it's too structured to be "punk" but it should feel adjacent to those themes at least

thematically the most important thing is the insta-death mechanic

- can use playbooks and specific moves to reinforce that theme rather than other central mechanics

the more I work on this the less confident I feel

- HERE's a pivot
- scrap the stats, go for something more wanderhome-like (at least as far as character creation/playbooks go)
- which makes it less PbtA? perhaps? but it does steal some ideas
- make it a more bite-sized TTRPG
  - one singular suicide mission
  - more in line with the rot, decay, apocalypse setting the HPC is cold and businesslike. all that matters to them is the mission

- have the character sheets reflect this. ludonarrative…. synergy?
  - NO appearance section (because it's not important to the HPC)
  - like that discussion we had in class - what you put in your game indicates what you think is important (heavy paraphrasing)